Eighth Wonder: The Thomas Bethune Story A. M. Cal
It's 1852. A slave born blind and feeble is left to die in a sweltering ramshackle smokehouse. Considered useless, the odd child is rescued by his new master and allowed to live in the Big House--then one night he begins playing Mozart at the age of three. Known throughout the world as Blind Tom, his fame becomes so great, rumors spread that Lincoln wants to kidnap him -a threat leading to his escape with his master to Europe. This riveting 19th century historical tale of the wondrous slave prodigy, Thomas Bethune, is told through the eyes of Colonel Bethune, the struggling planter who saves the peculiar boy from certain death and earns a fortune from his talents. Caught between the traditions of the South and the force of change championed by abolitionists, the Colonel and the talented slave desperately need one another for survival in a perilous world bent on tearing them apart long after slavery is over. “Deliberately rich in the smallest of details in order to bring the 19th century to life, my spirit is in this book along with Thomas’s. Maestro Thomas, difficult and unimaginably talented. He was a son, a slave, autistic, blind, and America’s Mozart, both hailed and exploited, respected and ridiculed. His story demanded to be told.” – A.M. Cal
